January 12: Dr. Jim Pfiffner, George Mason University Professor Emeritus and author of 15 books on the Presidency and Government, will present President Trump: Deep State or Shallow State?

President Trump often complained about the “deep state” of career civil servants and military leaders who, he asserted, were determined to undermine his presidency. But it was his own political appointees, the “shallow state,” who most effectively resisted his directives. Unprecedented in the American presidency, President Trump’s appointees in the White House, cabinet, military, and intelligence community refused to carry out many of the president’s directives. This level of resistance and record number of turnover appointees illustrates how different President Trump’s leadership was from all other modern presidents.

February 2: Dr. Mark Rozell, Dean of the Schar School of Policy and Government, George Mason University, will present The Changing Political South.

The US South traditionally has been defined as the eleven states of the former Confederacy. This talk will ask, "What really is the political South today?" Has the transformation of much of the Old South economically, culturally, and politically made the region generally no longer distinctive? How should the political South be defined and analyzed in light of substantial demographic and cultural change in the region and what are the political implications of the fast-growing and economically dynamic regions of the South?

March 2: Special Agent Lydia Jechorek, retired FBI Espionage Squad Supervisor, will present The Race to Find a Spy and His Buried Secrets: The Brian Regan Espionage Case.

Step into the clandestine world of espionage and walk through the case of Brian Regan, a USAF master sergeant turned traitor. A fascinating tale of buried secrets, this case is a race to identify an unknown subject and to solve the high-stakes dilemma of when to make the arrest. Regan's espionage activities threatened to compromise national security on a scale not seen in decades. Regan was such a serious threat to national security that he became the first espionage subject in 50 years to be eligible for the death penalty.

April 13: Dr. Harold Geller, American University Adjunct Professor and George Mason University Associate Professor Emeritus, will present UFOs: Yesterday, Today, and Tomorrow.

Examine Unidentified Aerial Phenomena (UAPs), previously known as UFOs, through a Sherlock Holmes approach of keen observational skills and deductive reasoning. Analyze the current media hype surrounding recently released photographs in light of historical precedents. Hear fascinating and enduring UFO stories from the retired director of George Mason University’s Observatory, and NASA Jet Propulsion Laboratory’s Solar System Ambassador.
